

Dolbey: Look, The minute somebody gets in your life, like a certain Deputy from Multnomah County, suddenly their name is plastered on sites that shouldn't be 'cause you have no business putting their name on those sites. You have no information that would require them to be on those sites. Do you follow what I'm saying?

Sullivan: I don't put names...the sites that

Dolbey: Do you didn't put a certain deputy's name on any site? Because he had the audacity to do his job?

Sullivan: (pause) I don't recall ever doing so.

Dolbey: You don't?

Sullivan: No.

Warren: Then how did his name get on there?

Sullivan: I don't know.

Dolbey: Well, we're going to find out. You do know that?

Sullivan: What does that have to do with anything?

Dolbey: To prove my point that you've spent years and years and years screwing with people and yet the minute you feel that you're being screwed with, all Hell breaks loose. But it's okay for you to do it to them. So I'm just philosophizing here a little bit.

Sullivan: I have never gone after someone's family just for knowing them. I have never...

Dolbey: Well isn't Darling the latest person in your attacks? In your long rambling emails about justice and...

Sullivan: He, he failed miserably. He should've told me that that document was authentic months ago. He should've at the very least told me what he wanted and he certainly should not have lied to me and told me that J [REDACTED] G [REDACTED] had been taken into custody when in fact he was not.

Warren: Why shouldn't he have done that?

Sullivan: Why? Well, let's see. As a result, I gained a false sense of security thinking that G [REDACTED] had yeah. And now G [REDACTED] is out there with a warrant, blaming me for it apparently. Um, let's see. If he had simply told me what he wanted to talk to
